Oldham County Cattleman Wins 2012 Master Conservationist

Jon Bednarski of Sherwood Acres and a member of the Oldham County Cattlemen's Association recently received one of Kentucky's highest awards as the 2012 Master Conservationist. He had previously won the same award in Oldham County, then earlier in the year for Area 4 which encompasses 8 surrounding Counties.

Bednarski states, "This is a huge honor for me, but also a real pat on the back for all Kentucky cattlemen who are great stewards of the land and their environment."

"Nearly every cattleman I know has participated in these wonderful environmental programs offered by the Kentucky Department of Conservation." "The real benefactors are the cattle we raise as these practices help provide them with a safe and humane environment to live in."

The Master Conservationist award recognizes farmers who have completed more than 90 percent of their soil and water conservation plan and is given by the Kentucky Association of Conservation Districts. Nationwide less than 2 percent of individuals who participate in production agriculture are awarded this distinguished title.
